

the agreement under duress rather than run the risk of restrictions that could affect the school's operation.

The next step in the escalating feud is a June 2 revocation hearing. Palmer and his attorney are gathering data and evidence in support of keeping the charter school open.

In addition to the main campus, Palmer Learning Partners Charter School runs a second campus at 5502 Harbison Ave. About 1,300 students are enrolled at the charter school.

The school has enlisted the support of organizers of an annual Lock Conference, which promotes beauty and natural hair products. Palmer charter school has hosted the event for the last five years.

"Everyone who attends enjoys themselves and greatly appreciates the school," a flier read, in part. "Now, the students, parents, teachers, and school administrators need our help. Let the Philadelphia School District know we want Walter Palmer Learning Partners Charter School to stay open."

July 8, 2014

Philadelphia Magazine

"No, an Uzi Was Not Found at a Philadelphia Charter School"

by VICTOR FIORILLA

On Monday, according to police, the assistant dean at the Walter D. Palmer Leadership Partners Charter School on Harbison Avenue in the Frankford section of Philadelphia found a loaded gun inside a locker during renovations.

CBS Philly quickly reported that the gun was an Uzi, and people really freak out about Uzis. But it turns out it was just a 9mm handgun from MasterPiece Arms, like the one seen here.

The School District isn't answering any questions about the gun, since Walter D. Palmer is a charter school. And as for the school itself, they hung up on me when I called to get a comment. But rest assured, parents: It was not an Uzi.

2014

Age of Justice

Comic: <http://www.ageofjustice.org/read-the-comic.html>